International Year of the Nurse and Midwife Scholarships

LSTM is committed to the development and recognition of Nurses and Midwives as being at the forefront of championing the Global Health agenda. Nurses and midwives play hugely important roles in the health arena and we are keen to promote the impact of nurses and midwives and the important roles they play.

We are delighted to announce a range of scholarships to support both International and NHS based nursing and midwifery staff as part of our support in the International Year of the Nurse and Midwife. These scholarships will be directed towards our Nurse/Midwife specific programme – the Professional Diploma in Tropical Nursing.

In light of recent events, such as the Coronavirus outbreak, LSTM strongly believe nurses and midwives have valuable expertise, competencies and grassroots perspectives to impact the prevention, spread and management of infectious disease outbreaks. Nurses and midwives are positioned for important roles in care delivery, education, leadership and policy making to influence population health outcomes and as such, LSTM are delighted to be part of this important global initiative.

You can find more information on this initiative by visiting:

Our Director of International Education, Michael Lurie, says “Nurses and midwives across the UK and the globe are very often the unsung heroes who provide immeasurable expertise to Global Health issues. Their passion for the profession and their impact is something we wish to celebrate. This initiative will provide further opportunities to contribute to this noble agenda.”

In additional, our Director of Studies for the DTN, Frances Wood says “The DTN curriculum is continuously responding to developing the nurses and midwives role in the evolving global health arena. Topical sessions are now included on the impact of climate change on health, refugee mental health and managing outbreaks such as coronavirus and ebola.’
